

My Favourite Architectural Project

In the lead-up to the announcement of the winners of the BDAV's 21st annual Building Design Awards at the end of this month, some of this year's contributing photographers have told us about their favourite architectural project. It is fair to say the photographer is critical to the entry submission: without well-balanced, well-thought-out images, the most impressive design project can be let down unless professional images are included in their entries. So, we urge Members to ensure you use professional photographers for your Awards entries. This is a worthwhile investment, as you can also use the images in your own marketing activities. (It should be noted none of the featured projects are entrants in the BDAV's 2016 Awards, which was a condition of photographers submitting for this feature.)

We Shoot Buildings

Designed and built by Terry Martinez from Liquid Design, I love this project as it is built on a long sloping road and it's quite magical the way it protrudes out to the extended area of the building. Bright day or clear blue night – the pure white building is stunning in every way.

Nelson Road by Garry Ormston

With a fine sense for light and proportion, the building achieves a high standard for inner-city suburban living, connecting old heritage and new contemporary through a wonderfully lush garden courtyard.

Carpenter Street, Brighton by Dig Design

Encompassing innovative and unique architectural ideas, this project was a treat. It was satisfying bringing these elements together within the frame to create the best angles.
